The Considerations on M. de Grimaldo's Circular Letter, &c. continued.

"NEither will it be found that the Ambassadours "have given or publish'd in the Courts "where they are employ'd, any such injurious Writings as is that of Monsr. de Beretti Landi to the States Generals, and that of Monsr. de Cellamare to the Marshal d'Huxelles, and the Letter of Monsr. de Grimaldo, Secretary of Dispatches. Either M. de Beretti thinks these things will make no Impression, or believes that an Augmentation of odious Insinuations will increase his Merit with his Master. But Monsr. de Grimaldo having anticipated him, he seeks about for more, and having fill'd his Memorial, he brings it to the States General; whereby he puts me upon the disagreeable Necessity of denying what he says, which is not my Fault, but his. For Example, all that he advances of the pretended Intrigues of the Emperour, by his Troops, and Spanish Revolts, to attempt Troubles in Spain, and the Emperour to raise Commotions and Seditions there, and make it many Years, as he can; all this I say is contrary to Truth. If there were such things we could acknowledge them without Blushing. The War which is now between his Majesty and the Duke of Anjou is all the Continent [illegible] Intelligence. But in Truth there is no such thing, and no body can believe that the present Condition of the Emperour's Affairs can permit him to engage his Subjects, altho' they were willing to contribute the Expence.

"It is needless to attribute the Error in this Article to the general Informations of Monsr. de Beretti Landi. But I cannot understand the Article of Excellency Contribution, which he lays the Emperour actually demands of [illegible] Neutrality. For in fine, all those Contributions which by the Treaty of Utrecht were to cease, and effectually ceased, and are at all resto'd; neither are there any Armies in those Countries, for the Subsistance whereof it is necessary to give them. The Assistance the Emperour now demands of the Hereditaries in Italy is of another Nature. 'Tis a Subsidy for the War against the Turks, which is so much the more reasonable, in that the Resolutions of the Empire preceded it, and even the Pope had granted one upon the Ecclesiastical Revenues, and that it is principally for the Defence of Italy that it is ask'd. Such a Subsidy has no Affinity to the Contributions that were raised in the other War for the Winter-Quarters, &c. Monsr. de Beretti Landi ought to know it being in Italian, and in forgetting that in a publick Memorial he should make no Difficulty of discovering so much Ignorance, [illegible] such ill Nature, for he cannot be excus'd of

"In the mean time, what he adds [illegible] declaration [illegible] at Vienna [illegible] Venice, upon the [illegible] He talks of [illegible] upon it. According to him [illegible] is Infamous, destructive, and pu[illegible] the Republick of Venetians, and in them, [illegible] themselves, as [illegible] Europe who [illegible] from all this believe [illegible] given at Vienna, [illegible] Speaking, than an [illegible] Merchants, Manufacturers, Workmen and Seamen, to come and settle themselves upon the Austrian Coasts, principally at the old and new [illegible] otherwise called Venedal, to begin, maintain and advance a maritime Commerce under Imperial Colours, with promise of favouring them with divers Advantages and Privileges; and to maintain, protect and defend them in the Liberty which is due to a lawful Commerce. Judge then if this be an insulting and destructive Declaration, and if it puts a Poignard to the Breast of the Venetians. Where "was the Prudence of Monsr. de Beretti Landi, when "he writ this Article; has he forgot then the Piracies "exercis'd in the Adriatick Sea by the Chevalier de "Fourbin, under the Colours of the Duke of Anjou? "I do not speak of the Bombs thrown into Trieste, "of the infesting the maritime Coasts, and the carrying off several Imperial Barks and other Ships. "All that may be excus'd by the Law of War. Neither "do I speak of 50 Venetian Ships and Vessels, attack'd, "forc'd, and pillag'd, or burnt in the Face of the Senate and the Republick. I speak of the Island Chicsa, insulted in such a Manner, that the Senate was "oblig'd to send Troops with 30 Pieces of Cannon to "defend it; and Venice it self block'd up for a Month "together by the same Frigates. What was then become of that pacifick and quiet Domination of the "Republick of Venice upon the Adriatick Sea, which "M. de Beretti Landi now so much magnifies? Was "it less respectable and less founded than it is at present.

"But here is another important Secret which this Minister reveals to Messieurs the States. 'It is "that Conferences have been held, and continue daily to be held at Vienna by the Council of Spain, to "leave the Port of Leghorn this Winter; Who, Sirs, "will not tremble at such terrible Advice? And "for my part, I ask who will not laugh at such a "Story? For the more 'tis look'd to, the more 'tis found destitute of all sort of Foundation. One must either laugh at, or pity him. However, he goes on, and as a Fact known to be true, cries out in the same Time, who will not conclude from this Behaviour, and the other things I have had the Honour to represent to you, that the Archduke is the Infractor and the Aggressor; and that the King of Spain owes that Benefit to all Europe, to confine himself no longer in Representations only. We see [illegible] Art of Reasoning, and what Justice of Consequences he argues [illegible] Laws to the Menstrual shall [illegible] from more. He there supposes Leghorn already taken, and by the means of that Place, all Italy subjected, without Regard to any whatsoever. And then laments the Blindness of Europe which will not yet see the Misfortune it is threatned with by the continual Usurpations of the Emperour, by his Infractions and his Violences, which at last, but too late, they will feel the Effects of and deplore their Negligence. One is tir'd in following so many Incongruities; and if it were not for the Consequence, one would toss 'em aside. But the Affair is but too serious. The Enemy confines himself not to Word; he acts, and he acts most violently. The Neutrality is broken, Sardigna is subdued, the Kingdom of Naples is threatned, and all Italy is in Danger. In such a Conjuncture, Contempt alone is unexcusable. When one compares Words with Actions, 'tis not difficult to see that the Duke of Anjou secretly nourishes the Design of subverting Italy, as soon as he can establish himself there, and bring into his Party the Princes of that Country, who believe they shall find their Account in it. He proposes no less than to banish the Imperial Authority from thence. 'Tis to that which [illegible] the Invasion of Sardigna and the Insinuations of Monsr. de Beretti Landi, when speaking of the Princes of Italy the Enemy, who were [illegible] to be possible, and [illegible] Pleni[illegible] Treaties of the Treaty of Baden, to expose there [illegible] themselves [illegible] with this melancholy Intimation, that Princes must address themselves at Vienna to obtain Justice there. For if it be true, "that it is a sad Intimation, to refer the Princes of "the Empire to the Emperor and the Aulick Council "for Redress of their Grievances, to receive Right "there according to the Laws and the Imperial Constitutions; if it be true, in a Word, that as often "as they believe themselves injur'd in their Rights, "it is not to the Tribunals of the Empire that they "are to address themselves, but to Foreign Princes, "and to General Congresses for Peace, what can be "infer'd from thence, but that those Princes are Independant, and that the Emperour or the Empire "have no Jurisdiction over them."
